Overview

- What is the FAVOR project?
- What issue does the project address?
- How can open practice help?
- Progress and findings so far...
- Getting involved

The FAVOR project

- Finding A Voice through Open Resources (JISC)
- Part-time, hourly-paid language tutors
- Sharing existing resources
- Creating new transition resources for prospective university applicants: ‘taste of’ new languages; language study at HE
- Collaboration: Southampton, SOAS, UCL SSEES, Aston, Newcastle

Issues for hourly-paid tutors

- Often unrecognised and undervalued
- Employed in ‘Language Centres’ separate from academic depts
- Teaching-only contracts (Coleman, J, 2004)
- “...could be forgiven for feeling like second-class citizens,” Klapper, J. (2006)
- Intensive teaching schedules
- Lack of opportunity to engage with academic life and professional development opportunities

Benefits of open practice

- Can demonstrate impact to institution as well as beyond
- Colleagues who work cross-sector, cross-institution can bring work together under one online profile
- Facilitates networking locally and beyond
- Creating new, high quality OERs will raise profiles of creators
- Increases the pool of relevant, adaptable resources available
- Enhances digital literacy and professional practice

Kanga Images

Description

The kanga is a piece of material originally worn by women in East Africa. Its cultural significance (apart from being an item of clothing), is to spread messages. These could be political, religious social romantic humorous or spiteful. The messages were originally in Arabic script but now are usually in the Roman script. While most kangas are written in Swahili some kangas portray touristic sentiments in English (for the purpose of being used as souvenirs), for example 'With Love from Africa.'

Example video of tutor feedback: student 8 RA2 Rachel

Student 8 Rachel Pre- Feedback Theory: 20 mins

Richard Galletly, Aston University

Description

Aim: to analyse students' written work and apply Academic English theory to a practical scenario Audience: Teachers of Academic English and students who are in transition considering going to university in the UK Level: upper Intermediate to advanced Learner time: with pre- theory and feedback exercises, at least 60 minutes In this video, Richard Galletly (an Academic English Lecturer at Aston University) presents the theory to help when writing an effective essay and gives written and verbal feedback on a student's essay. This video will be useful for students who may need help with essay questions, or who may be interested in studying business at university and may be considering going to the UK to study at an English university. It may also be useful for teachers who would like to know more about how to teach academic writing skills to international students, or local and regional students who may struggle with similar tasks. The video begins with an introduction to the theory from a selection of authors including Patrick Tissington, Stella Cottrell, Oshin Hogue, Gillett and Fitzpatrick, all of whom are excellent textbooks to follow when teaching or tutoring students with questions such as this. Although giving guidance on an essay such as the one shown as an example can be highly subjective, a broad approach has been applied which should be beneficial to a large number of students and potential students at higher education institutions including Universities and Colleges in the UK. Findings

- Tutors have enjoyed the process of sharing their work and preparing it for open publication
- Engaging with open practice has been easier than expected
- Obstacles to staff engaging in small projects are staggering and should be addressed

Concluding remarks

Open practice has potential for hourly-paid/part-time tutors:

- for professional development in a range of ways, from profile-raising; encouraging reflection on current practice, to enhancing digital literacy
- there is enhanced usefulness if part of a community of collegiate 'sharers'
- benefits for full engagement (sharing your work and downloading) and for partial (browsing, downloading others' work)

How can I get involved?

- Join a community repository such as LanguageBox
- Create a profile
- Browse the site and bookmark resources you like
- Share 'tasters' of your own work
- Set up a group and appeal for others with similar interests to join and share their work; set up a group for your own institution or team
